In commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the Parrhasian Heritage Park Field School, the Parrhasian Heritage Foundation of Tucson in collaboration with the Association of Heritage Consultants (ESDIAPOK) in Athens organises a series of virtual lectures to host leading scholars and professionals from across the globe, specialising in the field of heritage management. The focus of the series is on the methods and approaches to protecting the cultural and natural landscapes in the Mediterranean and the world, their values and surrounding communities.

The virtual lectures are open to everyone (attendance is free via zoom), aiming to provide a public platform where speakers will share their experiences and knowledge with all those interested in heritage management practice. Each session features a short presentation by the invited speaker, followed by a panel discussion with the organisers’ team, during which attendants have the opportunity to make questions and comments.

Please note that all sessions are held in English.

Panel Team:

Dr. David Gilman Romano | Co-Director and Field Director, Mt. Lykaion Excavation and Survey Project & Director of the Parrhasian Heritage Park Initiative; Karabots Professor of Greek Archaeology School of Anthropology and Director of the Archaeological Mapping Lab, University of Arizona, President, Parrhasian Heritage Foundation.

Dr. Panagiota (Nota) Pantzou | Assistant Professor in Heritage Management, Department of History & Archaeology, University of Patras

Dr. Mina Dragouni | Post-doctoral researcher, Department of History & Archaeology, University of Patras; Adjunct Lecturer in Cultural Economics, Open University of Cyprus

Dr. Stelios Lekakis | Visiting Fellow, McCord Centre, Newcastle University; Adjunct Lecturer in Cultural policy, Open University of Cyprus; Adjunct Lecturer in Political economy, Hellenic Open University

About the Lecture: A mine in the North of Argentina, a polluted river in Ethiopia, a depressed rural area in Greece and its overdeveloped counterpart. What do they have in common? Even if we do not realise it, archaeology is in the middle of many issues that strongly affect the environment and local communities. In a long tradition of no-dealing with them, the radical turn of the 80s opened a window that still misses most of the impact. Building on the flaws in the management of archaeological heritage, its actual power and a more inclusive practice, we will delve into how archaeology can have a more positive impact with little effort.

About the Speaker:

Dr. Jaime Almansa-Sánchez works as post-doctoral researcher in the Institute of Heritage Sciences, CSIC, in Spain after several years working as a consultant. His research focuses on public archaeology in a very wide sense, currently working on a project that analyses the management of archaeological heritage in the Mediterranean. Advocate of open access, he is also editor at JAS Arqueología, with several publications in the back, including AP: Online Journal in Public Archaeology.
